Case Study

A leader in hospitality and timeshare with a growing customer base of over 79000 members had to face a critical issue of overcoming the timeshare taboo. An organization that saw its growth on values such as reliability, trust and customer satisfaction had to fight an internal battle of working with marketing staff that was low on morale and high on attrition.

TalentPro's training initiative was structured around resolving behavioral issues of the marketing staff, and supervisors. While telemarketers were taught to improvise upon effective and assertive communication and telephone etiquette, supervisors were trained in leadership orientation, motivating team members, coaching skills, conflict resolution and rapport building.

With consistent communication methods in place, telemarketers saw a quantum jump in their conversions. As attrition rates reduced, supervisors took to motivating their teams, while teams understood the importance of staying together to achieve overall goals.
